Part II: The following story should be in the PAST TENSE, with “-ed” (or just “d” if the word ends in a vowel) at the end of regular verbs. Please read the passage and mark the verbs that need “-ed” added to them. If a word ends in “y” change the “y” to “i” and then add “-ed”. Cross out the incorrect verb and write the correct word over it.

There was once a town called Arcadia, which began to experience a very strange event: the dead of Arcadia start to appear again, alive, at the age at which they die. One couple lost their son when he was seven years old. He woke up in a corn field and wander into town, not knowing where he was. He found his way back to his family home, and shock his parents when he appear at the door. They could not believe that he was the child they had lost many years ago. They decide to raise him as if he were their real son—he look exactly like the son they had lost 20 years ago. Of course, they were older now, more like his grandparents than his parents, but they try their best to make his life as normal as possible. Everyone in town wonder what was happening. Soon another dead person arrive in the town. He had been kill in a shootout with the police during a bank robbery. Now he was back. This is the story of a newly release TV show call Resurrection.
